

ALBUQUERQUE MORNING JOURNAL.

THIRTY-FIRST YEAR. Vol. CXXI, No. 43.

ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1909.

By Mail 50 cts. a Month. Single Copies, 5 cents.
By Carrier 60 cents a month.

THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TODAY HONOR THE MEMORY OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

MR. LINCOLN WAS ALWAYS INTENSELY INTERESTED IN AFFAIRS OF NEW MEXICO

"Homely But Kindly," Says Aged Francisco Perea of Albuquerque, Who As Delegate in Congress, Was Close to President in Stormy Days of War, Who Knew John Wilkes Booth and Who Sat Under Lincoln's Box in Theater When Fatal Shot Was Fired.

"He was a wonderful man—wonderful. Plain and unprepossessing, but strong and kindly, homely but of stirring eloquence, history will probably never see his like again."

So said the venerable Francisco Perea, delegate in congress from New Mexico during the administration of President Abraham Lincoln; a personal friend of the martyred president, a man who saw him often, and who occupied a seat in the Ford theater in Washington directly under the box of the president when John Wilkes Booth fired the shot that plunged the civilized world into mourning.

Mr. Perea, now in his eighty-seventh year and partially paralyzed, talked to a representative of the Morning Journal the other day as he lay in his bed in the little Perea cottage at 1209 South Broadway. Although physically infirm Mr. Perea's mind is as keen and his memory of the president is as distinct as it was forty-three years ago and he took visible pleasure in recalling the scenes in the national capital before and after the assassination of the president; his personal acquaintance with Lincoln and particularly the cordial interest that he took in the amid scenes of civil war, entertained toward the people and the affairs of New Mexico.

"I first met Lincoln," said Mr. Perea, "in the spring of 1864. I was introduced to him by John Wats, then of Santa Fe, formerly of Indianapolis, a man who took part in the campaign through Illinois with the president, his warm friend, and a political speaker of ability. I met the president in the White House, in company with a number of senators, representatives and others. The first impression he made on me was one I have never forgotten. On that first occasion I was struck as always after, with his ability as an entertainer and his inexhaustible fund of stories, always with a sharp point hidden somewhere in the narrative."

"At that time he had many enemies even in Washington—people from the south who never lost a chance to let drop a hateful word about him. But even his enemies were forced to admire him. Many a time after the president had sent special messages to the senate or house I would hear people say as I passed along the street, 'What a masterly message,' or 'what beautiful language Old Abe used in that speech today.' Men of letters wondered at the purity and impressiveness of his dictation."

"I was a delegate to the convention in Baltimore that nominated Lincoln the second time. That was an occasion long to be remembered. I went to the convention with a young fellow named Jones from Mesilla. We were the only New Mexicans on the ground. We spent a hundred and fifty dollars on a flag that attracted a lot of attention at New Mexico's headquarters, a beautiful flag adorned with a streamer bearing the words, 'The Monroe Doctrine Forever.' We had it made in Baltimore and brought

"I heard the second inaugural address of the president, an address which has become classic; the address in which his charity for all and malleable toward none' stirred an answering chord all over the nation; an address which was the more deeply burned into memory by the terrible tragedy that followed it. He had a strong and sweet voice and although his appearance was not striking, I noticed that always after he had spoken a few words his audience became quiet and every eye was riveted on the speaker. He had a wonderful power over his hearers and his unparalleled command of beautiful language made his every utterance impressive."

"On the night of the assassination," continued Mr. Perea, "I returned from Baltimore and went to the Ford theater. On my way there I watched the bonfires—bonfires blazing as far as one could see in every direction, the capital in gala attire, and excitement and enthusiasm in the air. Next day the entire city was draped in mourning. The change was something terrible."

"I occupied a seat in the pit of the theater directly under the Lincoln box. I heard the shot fired by Booth. It sounded like the report of a small pistol, not loud, but loud enough to make the theater in an instant as quiet as the grave. Just for a moment—then Booth, to tell the old familiar story, leaped on the stage yelling 'Sic semper tyrannis,' dashed across the rostrum and disappeared; the shout arose that the president had been shot and the people poured out of the theater like sheep, the house being entirely emptied in a few seconds, it seemed. The confusion and grief that swept over the city that night is something I shall never forget. It was terrible."

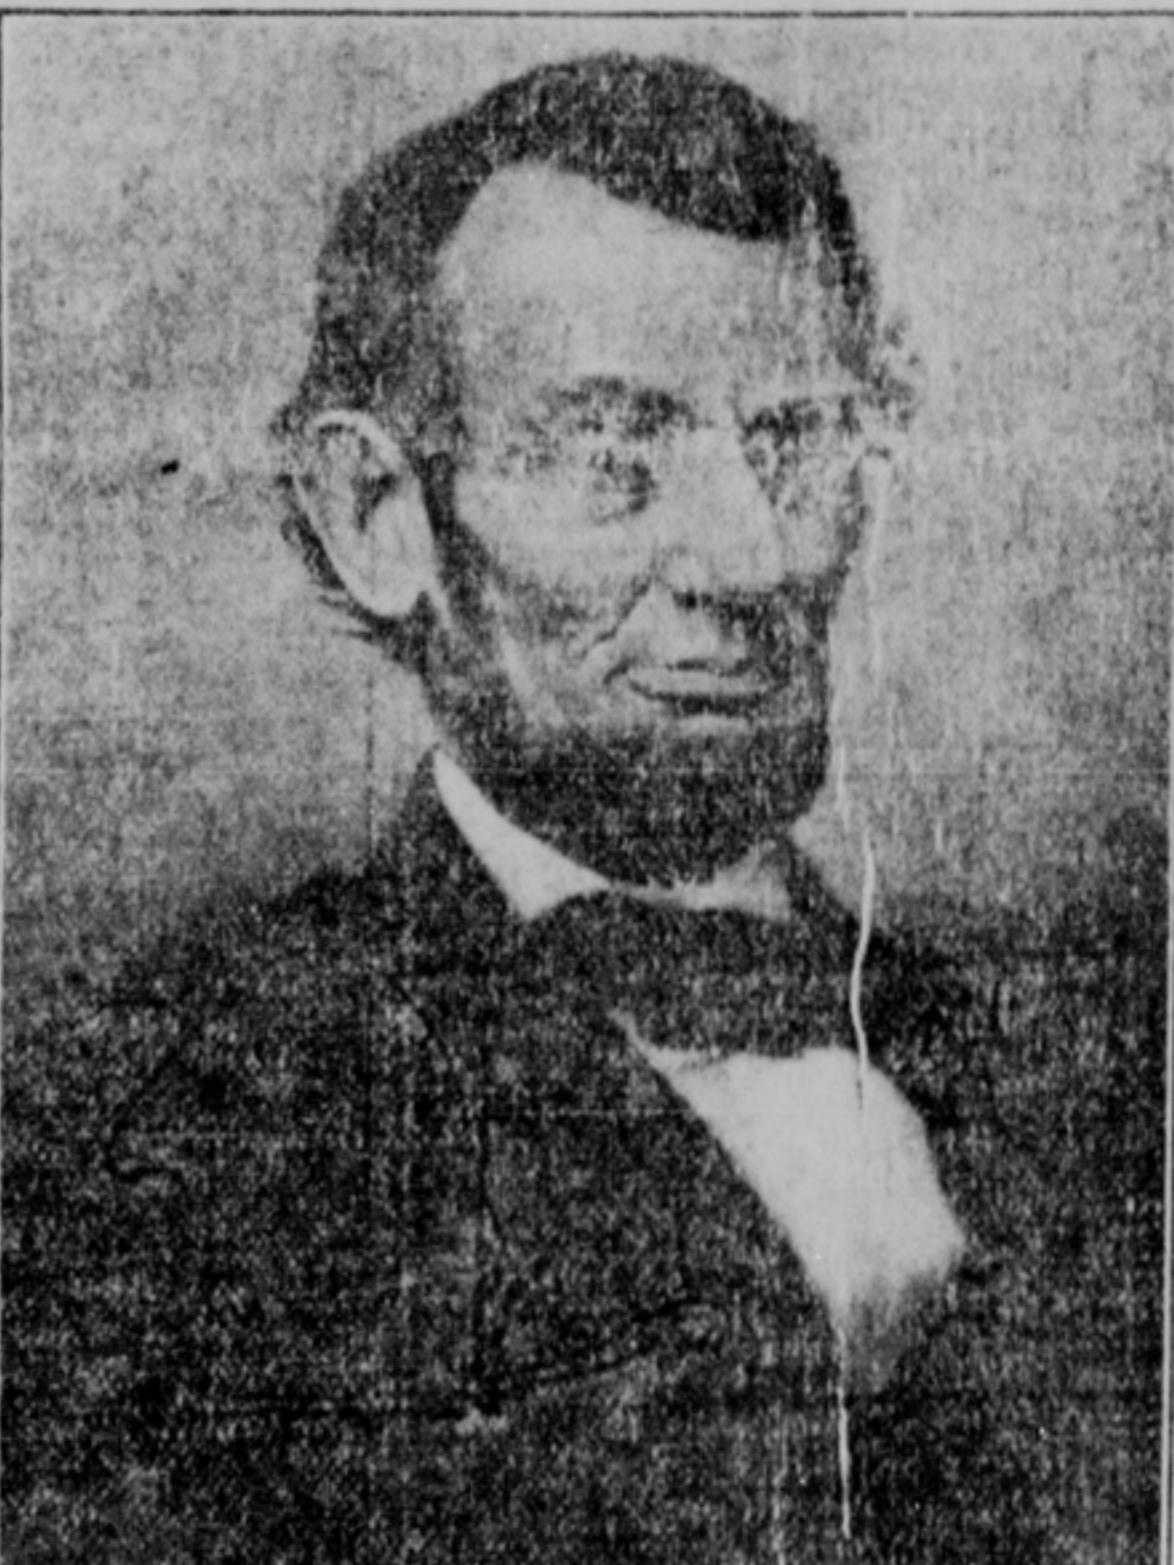

"I think Booth was put up to the job. The rebellion was breaking down and the south was desperate. Grant succeeded in his attack on Richmond; the news of Petersburg came; it was evident the cause of the south was lost. Long before the shooting, I stayed for a month at the National hotel with Booth. I saw him holding whispered conversations in quiet places with suspicious looking young

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington, the fifth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nine and of the independence of the United States, the one hundred and thirty-third." (Signed): THEODORE ROOSEVELT
"By the president:
ROBERT BACON,
Secretary of State."

Important Events in Lincoln's Life

Born in a log cabin near Hodgenville, now Larue County, Ky.—Feb. 12, 1809.
His father moves with his family into the wilderness near Gentryville, Ind.—1816.
His mother dies at the age of 35—1818.
His father's second marriage—1819.
Walks nine miles a day going to and returning from school—1826.
Makes a trip to New Orleans and back at work on a flat boat—1828.
Drives in an ox cart with his father and step-mother to a clearing on the Sangamon river, near Decatur, Ill.—1829.
Spits rails to surround the clearing with a fence—1829.
Makes another flat boat trip to New Orleans and back, on which trip he first sees negroes shackled together in chains and forms his opinion concerning slavery—May, 1831.
Begins work in a store at New Salem, Ill.—August, 1831.
Enlists in the Black Hawk war; elected captain of volunteers—1832.
Announces himself a Whig candidate for the legislature and is defeated—1832.
Storekeeper, postmaster and surveyor—1833.
Elected to the Illinois legislature—1834.
Re-elected to the legislature—1835 to 1842.
Studies law at Springfield—1837.
Is a presidential elector on the Whig National ticket—1840.
Marries Mary Todd—November 4th, 1842.
Canvasses Illinois for Henry Clay—1844.
Elected to Congress—1846.
Supports General Taylor for president—1848.
Engages in law practice—1849-1854.
Debates with Douglas at Peoria and Springfield—1855.
Aids in organizing the Republican party—1855-1856.
Joins debates in Illinois with Stephen A. Douglas—1858.
Makes political speeches in Iowa—1859.
Visits New York and speaks at Cooper Union—February, 1860.
Attends republican state convention at Decatur, declared to be the choice of Illinois for the presidency—May, 1860.
Nominated at Chicago as the republican candidate for president—May 16th, 1860.
Elected president over Stephen A. Douglas, J. C. Breckinridge and John Bell—November, 1860.
Inaugurated president—March 4th, 1861.
Issues first order for troops to put down the rebellion—April 15, 1861.
Urges McClellan to advance—April, 1862.
Appeals for the support of the border states for the Union cause—March 20, 1862.
Calls for 300,000 more troops—July, 1862.
Issues Emancipation Proclamation—Jan. 1st, 1863.
Thanks Grant for capture of Vicksburg—July, 1863.
Holds address at Gettysburg—Nov. 19th, 1863.
Calls for 500,000 volunteers—July, 1864.
Re-nominated and re-elected president—1864.
Thanks Sherman for the capture of Atlanta—September, 1864.
His second inauguration—March 4th, 1865.
Assassinated—April 14th, 1865.

Abraham Lincoln,
the Great
Emancipator,
Sixteenth
President of the United States.

A blend of mirth and sadness, smiles and tears;
A quaint knight errant of the pioneer;
A homely hero, born of star and sod;
A Peasant Prince, a masterpiece of God.
Written Malone in Chicago Tribune, Feb. 12, 1909.

Lincoln was the most easily approached man in Washington. I had considerable business with Secretary of War Stanton and other cabinet officers, but by none was I received with the affable courtesy extended by the president. He was never impatient nor ill-tempered. Plain and simple, he had a peculiar magnetism that made you his friend at once. He was homely, even unprepossessing, but you never noticed it after you got to talking with him. General Grant was much the same way, but I had known him well before the war down in New Mexico.

"At that time he had many enemies even in Washington—people from the south who never lost a chance to let drop a hateful word about him. But even his enemies were forced to admire him. Many a time after the president had sent special messages to the senate or house I would hear people say as I passed along the street, 'What a masterly message,' or 'what beautiful language Old Abe used in that speech today.' Men of letters wondered at the purity and impressiveness of his dictation."

"I heard the second inaugural address of the president, an address which has become classic; the address in which his charity for all and malleable toward none' stirred an answering chord all over the nation; an address which was the more deeply burned into memory by the terrible tragedy that followed it. He had a strong and sweet voice and although his appearance was not striking, I noticed that always after he had spoken a few words his audience became quiet and every eye was riveted on the speaker. He had a wonderful power over his hearers and his unparalleled command of beautiful language made his every utterance impressive."

"On the night of the assassination," continued Mr. Perea, "I returned from Baltimore and went to the Ford theater. On my way there I watched the bonfires—bonfires blazing as far as one could see in every direction, the capital in gala attire, and excitement and enthusiasm in the air. Next day the entire city was draped in mourning. The change was something terrible."

"I occupied a seat in the pit of the theater directly under the Lincoln box. I heard the shot fired by Booth. It sounded like the report of a small pistol, not loud, but loud enough to make the theater in an instant as quiet as the grave. Just for a moment—then Booth, to tell the old familiar story, leaped on the stage yelling 'Sic semper tyrannis,' dashed across the rostrum and disappeared; the shout arose that the president had been shot and the people poured out of the theater like sheep, the house being entirely emptied in a few seconds, it seemed. The confusion and grief that swept over the city that night is something I shall never forget. It was terrible."

"I think Booth was put up to the job. The rebellion was breaking down and the south was desperate. Grant succeeded in his attack on Richmond; the news of Petersburg came; it was evident the cause of the south was lost. Long before the shooting, I stayed for a month at the National hotel with Booth. I saw him holding whispered conversations in quiet places with suspicious looking young

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington, the fifth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nine and of the independence of the United States, the one hundred and thirty-third." (Signed): THEODORE ROOSEVELT
"By the president:
ROBERT BACON,
Secretary of State."

Lincoln's Address at Gettysburg

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now that we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived or so dedicated can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who gave their lives that the nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather to be dedicated to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be dedicated here to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

ROOSEVELT TO LAY CORNER STONE

GREAT MEN GATHER AT LINCOLN'S BIRTHPLACE

Impressive Exercises at Site of Little Log Cabin Among the Mountains of Kentucky at Hodgenville.

By Morning Journal Special Leased Wire

Hodgenville, Ky., Feb. 11.—The centenary of Abraham Lincoln's birth will be observed generally throughout the United States, but nowhere will the commemoration exercises command more interest than those to be held in this little town on February 12. Two miles from here on the Lincoln farm, which has been purchased by a national association, formed for the purpose, President Roosevelt will lay the corner stone of a memorial building now being erected by popular subscription to mark Lincoln's birthplace, and to protect for all time the little log cabin in which the martyr president was born.

The centenary address on this occasion will be delivered by President Roosevelt. General Luke E. Wright, the first to speak, will speak on behalf of the Confederate soldiers. General Grant Wilson will represent the veterans of the union army and Lincoln's native state will be represented by Governor Augustus E. Wilson, of Kentucky. Other addresses will be made by Bishop Galloway, of Mississippi, and ex-Governor Joseph W. Folk, of Missouri.

Hodgenville, which is near the geographical center of the state of Kentucky, and is not far from the center of population in the United States, promises to become a new Mecca. Americans and the Lincoln farm, a second Mount Vernon. Although Abraham Lincoln had other homes, there is a sentiment about his birthplace that does not attach to any of them. He lived here for eight years, and before he left, knew very much of what Mark Twain calls "the moled little farm that raised a man." He went swimming in the nearby creek and by the light from the huge fireplace in the little cabin, he learned his first lessons.

It was in 1809 that Thomas Lincoln brought his bride, Nancy Hanks, and established the rude little home that three years later was to welcome into the world the future president. Their's was the rough life of pioneers; the farm was then as it now is, a sterile piece of land, and to make both ends meet the elder Lincoln did odd jobs of carpentry in the vicinity, besides working on the farm. The actual necessities of life were seldom lacking, but it was a life of severe poverty. For some years Thomas Lincoln served as a county supervisor of public roads an important position in that time. Land owners paid their poll-tax with pick and shovel then, and on road mending days he used to take little Abe along for company and for help. There are old-timers here now who claim that there is not a section of the old pike within several miles of his home along which Abraham Lincoln has not played or on which he has not driven his ox team.

At this time Kentucky offered few alms to a poor man and in 1816 the Lincoln's sold the little farm and moved to Indiana. Subsequently Abraham Lincoln moved into Illinois and the rest is history. But through all the years that followed he never forgot his first home. He rarely referred to it, and when he had become president of the United States he is known to have said, "When the war is over I would like very much to visit my old Kentucky home. I remember it well."

But he never did return and the farm and the little log cabin had a varied history. Thomas Lincoln sold the place to a family named Clegg and it remained in their hands for over seventy years. Its beautiful rock walls, its unique and interesting feature and only recently has anyone awakened to the realization that those one hundred and ten acres had any value beyond their yield in corn and sorghum. From time to time newspapers have announced that the Lincoln birthplace farm was to be sold but as a matter of fact it has only changed hands twice since Thomas Lincoln's original transfer. A few years ago it was given to the management of a group of New Englanders who removed the log cabin to their exhibition in Nashville, and later sold it to some exhibitors who took it about the country as a travelling show. But a year or two ago the logs were found in a cellar at College Point, Long Island, where it was stored and with ceremony was restored to its original site.

The farm itself has been the subject of litigation for several years and efforts have been made by various interests to use it for some enterprise or another. Many schemes have been suggested from time to time but none of them have borne an large national significance. Finally in 1905 it was advertised that "on Aug. 28 the Lincoln Farm was to be sold between the hours of ten and two from the court house steps at public outcry to the highest bidder."

Mr. Robert J. Collier, of New York City, had been negotiating for the property and upon the appearance of his notice he despatched Mr. Richard Lloyd Jones to Hodgenville, with instructions to buy the place if possible.

The day set for the bidding was (Continued on Page 2, Column 4.)

ALBUQUERQUE TO PAY FITTING TRIBUTE TO EMANCIPATOR CONFIDENT OF SUCCESS

Great Patriotic Demonstration at Elks' Theater This Afternoon Will Mark Celebration of Centennial While University and City and County Schools Will Carry Out Special Exercises in Honor of Memory of the Martyr President.

Tuesday, February 12th, 1909, the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, in log cabin in Kentucky, will be observed in Albuquerque today with that patriotic fervor which always marks a national celebration in this city. New Mexico has a peculiar affection for the memory of the great emancipator, which will find sincere and enthusiastic expression in special exercises all over the territory, nowhere more enthusiastic and impressive than in Albuquerque.

A big patriotic demonstration and mass meeting will be held at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon in the Elks' theater, to which the general public is invited and it is likely that the capacity of the theater will be taxed when the time for the gathering arrives.

The members of G. K. Warren post Grand Army of the Republic, the Ladies of the G. A. R., the Women's Relief corps, the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Sons of the American Revolution will attend the meeting in a body. The city schools will co-operate and the school pupils will furnish the music for the occasion under the direction of Mrs. Caroline A. Strong, director of music in the public schools. Major Frank H. Lester will preside at the meeting and addresses will be made by prominent people. The program will be as follows:

Program.

Music, "When the Regiment Goes,

ARTESIA MEN ARMY BILL GOES TO THE GOVERNOR

MAKE STRONG SHOWING BEFORE LEGISLATURE

FLOURISHING DISTRICT OF NORTHERN EDDY COUNTY HAS POPULATION AND WEALTH TO ASSURE PROSPERITY FROM START.

Morning Journal Bureau, The Palace Hotel, Santa Fe, N. M., Feb. 11.

Of all the county division projects now pending before the New Mexico legislature there is none with a more solid basis than that which proposes to create Artesia county out of the northern portion of Eddy county. That at least, is the impression which has been left in the minds of a large majority of people here in and out of the legislature by the delegations of Artesia business men who left for their homes tonight after four busy days spent in presenting their claims to the legislature.

In addition to D. L. Newkirk, Harry W. Hamilton, J. W. Trunkett, J. H. Enfield and J. E. Christopher, all of whom have had an active part in the building of the thriving town of Artesia, which is proposed to make the seat of government.

Two years ago Mr. Newkirk came to Santa Fe in the interest of Artesia county. With a different membership in the house of representatives he might have succeeded at that time in getting Artesia county created. As

ACT TO PAY ALBUQUERQUE DEBT BECOMES LAW

BILLS INTRODUCED IN THE HOUSE FOR APPROPRIATIONS FOR ARMORIES IN ROSWELL, LAS VEGAS, SILVER CITY AND LAS CRUCES,

Morning Journal Bureau, The Palace Hotel, Santa Fe, N. M., Feb. 11.

The house of representatives this morning, by a vote of 19 to 1, passed Mr. Hanley's bill, House Bill No. 1, which appropriates $1,000,000 to supply the deficiency in the cost of the New Mexico national guard armory at Albuquerque. The original appropriation for this armory building was $7,500, Las Vegas receiving a similar amount. Later appropriations of $10,000 each were made for armories at Santa Fe, Silver City, Las Vegas and Roswell. The use of the money in site and cost of the armory at Albuquerque was the need for a convention hall large enough to entertain the Sixteenth National Irrigation congress properly. The original appropriation was inadequate for a satisfactory armory and business men of Albuquerque borrowed the money from Albuquerque banks, necessary to complete the building before the legislature would appropriate funds to make good the deficiency.

This was done this morning when the house passed the bill, which passed

(Continued on Page 2, Column 2.)

(Continued on Page 2, Column 2.)

MR. LINCOLN WAS ALWAYS INTENSELY INTERESTED IN NEW MEXICO

(Continued from Page 1, Column 2.)

men and am confident he planned the thing out long before."

"Abraham Lincoln was the greatest man the nation has ever seen," concluded Mr. Perea with a sigh, "the lowliest and the greatest. I doubt if the world has seen any greater. To my mind he was a much bigger man, for instance, than this fellow here," —and Mr. Perea turned and pointed up to an old engraving showing Napoleon taking leave of his wife.— "When I went to school in Baltimore I knew an ex-captain in the army of Bonaparte who knew the emperor well and who used to tell me much about him that I never learned otherwise. But the fame of the war lord is not as great to my mind as that of the Man of Peace. It is doubtful if, all things considered, there will be another man who will rise to the sublimity of Abraham Lincoln."