Wednesday, April 19, 1865.

Most memorable day! A day of mourning and lamentation! A continent in tears! The Nation weeping, and her foes dismayed and fleeing in despair! This cursed rebellion has culminated in gigantic atrocities on the soul murder of our great, good, beloved President. The land of a vile assassin extinguished his precious life last Friday evening, and to-day over seventy million people mourn after his death, and swear over his grave in High Heaven a solemn, determined oath that the black sentinels, which for four black years made our beautiful country old in deeds of carnage and violence, shall be utterly wiped out of existence, and everbandied justice have been interrupted work with the leaders, who caused such wide-spread misery.

As the dreadful news of the assassination of Mr. A. Lincoln flashed over the thousands of miles of the continent, the Nation received a paralyzing shock indeed. A feeling of sorrow and deep gloom spread over the land, and men were struck dumb with awe. All felt the terrible calamity and felt the national... reverence. We have lost a Father ! a peculiar has fallen. For four years, with a far seeing, calm and clear mind, steady and unwavering in high principle and noble integrity, with the purest patriotism and self-sacrifice, all embracing love and tender care, patient and unshaken by censure or calumny, looking with devout faith and childlike trust to the end as a merciful Providence would surely protect the sight and bring it to victory, he has guided his kinsmen country in her greatest dangers and perils. Has firmly established the principle of universal freedom, subdued the power of her enemies, and raised again our proud banner upon the ruined walls of that very fortress of liberty. Treason struck it down just five years before, and now that the future rose up before his gifted vision, radiant with glory and happiness and strength, and his laborious labors found a sweet reward, malicious labored cut him off in the height of his usefulness —

The selfish spirit of slavery, and treason. It has done its perfect work — but it has struck the death blow at its own black heart. If there has existed any tendency to forget the depth of its dastardly wickedness, and to the case, with these men who led in treasur... and infancy, that tendency has vanished. There was a more sudden revolution of feeling in the mind of a whole great nation, as has been effected by the assassination of our eminent President. Peace would have done nothing so destructive of its own ends, so suicidal to its own existence. Both at home and with the whole civilized world it stands now utterly and forever condemned. It has fully revealed its true character, and the reckless, godless barbarity which has indeed marked the conduct of the South throughout.
This war, the outgrowth and legitimate consequence of that revolting unhuman system of Slavery. But thank God! Henceforth our flag must wave over a country undivided and free, where no cruel lash drives a human chattel to the unwilling work, where no being is 'created immortal and redeemed by the blood of Jesus Christ,' is bought and bartered away for money; where no wanton outrage can under the sanction of law trample under foot the ties of marriage and family, yet where education can no more be made a penal offense; where life is held sacred, where a man can travel from Maine to Florida undetected, where the Pacific rostra are open to him, where no revolver and knife; where, within the bounds of seven and four, he can utter his sentiments with out.
fear and restraint; unter an every foot of it he can truly feel that it is his fatherland, belonging to him and every citizen of it, and end to his utter through out its vast extent; in which he has the right of a freeman, the protection of the law, the consciousness of security, and a just pride in a great country and a superior form of government that has stood the fire trial of an unparalleled insurrection, most revolting and approved itself as more worthy of the confidence of all mankind, and the respect of foreign powers, than ever before it was or severely tried.

And to this end President Abraham Lincoln has contributed more than any other man. He had established freedom, and has died for it. He lived for the great, noble principle, and died for it. His death is the seal of Liberty. He is our Martyr-President. The grateful heart of the Nation will hold his name most dear, and all future history will call him the Great and the Good. His name is imprinted in sacred memory in the hearts of the free, the oppressed, and down-trodden, who father and Liberator he emphatically was, and whover, and everywhere, the crushing-load of the system of slavery when the sad and these United States in costs it inseparably and most honorably the venerable beloved name of Abraham Lincoln, the great Liberator, and Martyr of Freedom.

The Nation has prayed to-day, and is praying, that the merciful and almighty God, our Father and our Guide, may impart wisdom, and strength, and discernment to his successor, the Andrew Johnson, and make him a willing and efficient instrument in His hand, to do His pleasure, and lead His people through the waves of difficulties which yet surround us on every side, to peace, and justice, and happiness, in the fear of God, to his honor and glory. Amen.

April 30, 1865. Sunday P.M.

Peace, like the blend dew of Heaven, has come to this afflicted country! There is no more enemy to fight. The large armies of rebellion and its minions, and hope, are broken, disarrayed, and captured. They are no more Generals to lead — they also are our prisoners. Their seaports, their forts, their large cities, and factories, and depots of war, are in our possession or destroyed. We command their rail-roads, and every avenue of escape. Our gunboats ply; their rivers, our armies, strong in victory, occupy...

...
Wednesday, April 19, 1865

Most memorable day! A day of mourning and lamentation! A continent in tears! The Nation weeping, and her foes dismayed and fleeing in disguise and terror! This cursed rebellion has culminated its gigantic atrocities in the foul murder of our great, good, beloved President. The hand of a vile assassin extinguished his precious life last Friday evening, and today over twenty millions of people mourn after his hearse, and swear over his grave by High Heaven a solemn, determined oath, that the black wickedness, which has for four bloody years made our beautiful country old in deeds of carnage and violence, shall be utterly wiped out of existence, and evenhanded Justice have her uninterrupted work with the leaders, who caused such widespread misery.

As the dreadful news of the assassination of Mr. Abr. Lincoln flashed over the thousands of miles of this continent, the Nation received a paralysis shock indeed. A feeling of horror and deep gloom spread over the land, and men were struck dumb with awe. All felt the fearful calamity and felt the national bereavement. We have lost a Father! A great man has fallen. For four years, with a far-seeing calm and clear mind, steady and unwavering in high principle and sterling integrity, with the purest patriotism and self-sacrifice, an all embracing love and tender care, patient and untouched by censure or calumny, looking with devout faith and childlike trust to the end, as a merciful Providence would surely protect the sight and bring it to victory, he has guided his distressed county in her greatest dangers and perils, has firmly established the principle of universal freedom, subdued the power of her enemies, and raised again, our proud banner upon the ruined walls of that very fortress whence treason struck it down just four years before, and now that the future rose up before his gratified vision, radiant with glory and happiness and strength, and his herkulean labors found a sweet reward, malicious hatred cut him off in the hight of his usefulness. The hellish spirit of slavery and treason has done its perfect work—but it has struck the death blow at its own black heart. If there has existed any tendency to forget the depth of its heinous wickedness and to be easy with those men who led in treason and infamy, that tendency has vanished. There never was a more sudden revolution of feeling in the common mind of a whole great nation, as has been effected by the assassination of our lamented President.

Treason could have done nothing so destructive of its own ends, so suicidal to its own existence. Both at home and with the whole civilized world it stands now utterly and forever condemned. God has fully revealed its true character, and the reckless, godless barbarity which has indeed marked the conduct of the South throughout this war, the outgrowth and legitimate consequence of that revolting inhuman system of slavery. But thank God! Henceforth our flag must wave over a country undivided and free, where no cruel lash drives a human chattel to their unwilling work; where no being created immortal and redeemed by the blood of Jesus Christ is bought and bartered away for money; where no wanton outrage can under the sanction of law trample under foot the ties of marriage and family relations; where education can no more be made a penal offence, where life is held sacred; where a man can travel from Maine to Florida and to the far Pacific without carrying revolver and knife; where within the bounds of reason and law, he can utter his sentiments without fear and restraint; where on every foot of it he can truely feel that it is his fatherland, belonging to him and every citizen from one end to the other throughout its vast extent; where he has the right of a freeman, the protection of the law, the consciousness of security, and a just pride in a great country and a superior form of government, that has stood the fiery trial of an unparalled insurrection most victoriously and approved itself more worthy of the confidence of all mankind, and the respect of foreign powers, than even before it was so severely tried.

And to this end President Abraham Lincoln has contributed more than any other man. He has established freedom, and has died its martyr. He lived for a great, noble principle, and died for it. His death is the seal of Liberty. He is our Martyr-President. The grateful heart of the nation will hold his name most dear and all future history will call him the great and the good. His name is enshrined in sacred memory in the hearts of the poor, the oppressed, and down-trodden, whose father and liberator he emphatically has been, and wherever and whenever, the crushing out of the system of human slavery upon the soil of these United States is mentioned, by word or print, there will be associated with it inseperably and most favorably the venerated, beloved name of Abraham Lincoln, the great Liberator, and martyr of freedom!

The Nation has prayed today, and is praying, that the merciful and almighty God, our ruler and our guide may impart wisdom, and strength, and firmness to his successor, Mr. Andrew Johnson, and make him a willing and fit instrument in his land to do his heavenly will, and lead this people through the mazes of difficulties which yet surround us on every side, to peace, and justice, and happiness, in the fear of God, to his honor and glory, Amen!